The pages in this section provide detailed information about the following types of applications: New Drug for Investigative Purposes (IND) Current Federal law requires that a drug be the subject of an approved marketing application before it is moved or distributed within state bounds. Because a sponsor will probably ask clinical investigators in many states to ship the drug to the investigation, they should seek an exemption from this legal requirement. IND is the means by which the sponsor technically obtains this exemption from the FDA. Newer Drug Application (NDA) When the sponsor of a new drug believes that sufficient evidence about the safety and efficacy of the drug is obtained to meet the FDA's requirements for marketing approval, the sponsor offers a new drug application (NDA) to the FDA. The application should include data from specific technical perspectives reviewed, including chemistry, pharmacology, medicine, biopharmaceutics and statistics. If nda is approved, the product can be marketed in the United States. For internal monitoring purposes, an NDA number is assigned to all NDA's. The abbreviated New Drug Application (ANDA) Abbreviated New Drug Application (ANDA) includes data that provide a review and final approval of a generic drug product when presented to the FDA's Drug Evaluation and Research Center, the Office of General Medicines. General drug applications are often abbreviated because they do not contain pre-clinical (animal) and clinical (human) data to determine safety and efficacy. Instead, a general applicant should scientifically show that the product is bioequivalent (that is, it performs in the same way as innovative medicine). Once approved, an applicant will market the generic drug product to provide a safe, effective, low-cost alternative to manufacturing and the American public. More Over-the-Counter Drugs (OTC) Over-the-counter (OTC) drugs play an increasingly vital role in America's healthcare system. OTC pharmaceutical products are these drugs that can be used to consumers without a prescription. There are more than 80 therapeutic categories of OTC drugs, ranging from weight control drug products to acne drug products. As with prescription drugs, CDER oversees OTC drugs to make sure they are properly labeled and outweigh the risks of their benefits. further Biological License Application (BLA) Biological products have been approved for marketing in accordance with the provisions of the Public Health Services (PHS) Act. The law requires a company that makes a biological production for sale in interstate commerce to obtain a license for the product. A biological license application is an application with specific information about manufacturing processes, chemistry, pharmacology, clinical pharmacology and the medical effects of the biological product. If the information provided meets FDA requirements, the application is approved and a license is granted that allows the company to market the product. other Related Links Addresses for Editor Submissions Start a Free Applicable experiment and access interview scheduling tools, interview kits, and scorecards. Get started The payment application is a construction document outlining how to pay a contractor. A payment application includes the services or materials used, or jobs executed under a contract agreement. This document is usually presented as a list and contains the unit price and quantity of each item being laid. The payment application provides both the owner and the contractor with a method of checking which items or materials are provided by the contractor. It's a great tool to speed up payment and minimize the likelihood of errors. It also helps track project cost, completion balance, material received to date, material loaded to date, and completed work. The documents required for the payment application can vary from project to project, but most contain a general form and one or more scheduling documents. Photo Caiaimage/Trevor Adeline Getty Images Applications for the most frequently used payment forms include: AIA Forms: G702 Application and Payment Certificate: Serves as a payment request by the contractor and includes a certificate by the architect to determine whether the payment has been approved. ConsensusDOCS 291 Payment Application (GMP): Facilitates the calculation and documentation of progress payments where the payment basis is the guaranteed maximum price. ConsensusDOCS 292 Payment Application (Med): Facilitates the calculation and documentation of progress payments for which the contract price is a wholesale payment. ConsensusDOCS 293 Values Schedule: Provides a breakdown of the cost of the elements of the study and should be used with consensusdocs reference for ConsensusDOCS 291 and ConsensusDOCS 292 payment forms. A values schedule is a page on summaries of items listed together with unit prices and quantities and paid and approved for payment. Provides an overview of project status. Depending on how the contract is written, this can be in the form of a bulk payment value or a detailed list that will provide a better understanding of the invoiced work. It is a good idea to provide a sample value sheet during the negotiation process and RFP and bid transactions. This can then be used as the timing of the values, ensuring a smoother operation. Program #2 provides a comprehensive list of subcontractors participating in the relevant period and doing business under the specified contract. This is necessary to justify the amounts approved under the values schedule. This schedule is very specific in some contracts and may require additional documentation, such as payrolls, certificates, and waivers, to make sure that all sub-fees are paid. A document that can be #3 payment application and notices waives and disclaimers from all subcontractors equipping labor, services or materials under the payment document. This document provides a guarantee to the customer that there will be no claim by subcontractors due to payment, performance or other potential demand. Some contracts require you to submit the latest and most up-to-date project schedule to make sure that the project continues as it progresses as expected. The customer can also request photos or videos documenting the project's progress. A well-crafted resume by Oubria Tronshaw and applying for a job can mean the difference between earning a regular salary or stressing out on a stack of bills. Learn how to submit a resume and app that emphasizes your complete, detailed and accurate and specific strengths and skill to solidify your financial future. Your name and contact information should be listed at the top of both your resume and your application. Because you can format the resume yourself, select an open and legible font that is usually larger than the font used in the rest of the document. A job application provides fields for you to fill in your information. Get ready to fill in your first and last name, day, evening and cell phone numbers, physical address (including city, state, and zip code) and email address. Resumes and job applications must be printed properly in blue or black ink. Although both job applications and resumes are often in different places, they require your educational background. Job applications often provide fields for training history after your work experience. Resumes often go below your contact information. The required details are also different. Job applications provide space for high school, college, graduate school and, if any, business school. For each field, you must fill in the name of the school, city, and state, and the degree earned (or the years that participated). Because it's at your discretion what information goes to the resume, you can share as many or as few educational backgrounds as you want, as long as the information you provide is relevant to the job you want. If you are applying for a job that requires a master's degree, high school information is probably not required. Job applications and resumes need a detailed description of your job history. In both documents, you'll need to briefly explain the company name, city, and state, uptime, official title, and tasks. Job applications can also immediately request your supervisor's name and phone number and why you left the post. This information is not required on the resume. A resume, however, should add a brief description of your old business achievements. For example, it increased year-end revenue by 20 percent or helped the University renew its accreditation for the next decade. List your work history chronologically starting with your latest position. After your work history, both documents should list the specific skills that you want a potential employer to know you have. Examples include computer and special technology skills, additional spoken languages, and awards or publications related to your career. Job applications usually require you to add three or more academic or professional references. Do not choose relatives or friends to vouch for you. Choose who can talk about your work ethic and potential -- or your real -- career success. Get ready to add each person's first and last name, company name and title, physical address, phone number, and what time and how they scanned you. While you don't need to put this information on your resume, you can get it if a potential employer wants it. Fill out your job applications with blue or black ink and print properly. Take the time to avoid deletion. If you get home from practice, don't fill up close to food or drink to avoid blemishes. Always check your job application twice before submitting, or continue with errors. Follow all instructions carefully and do not leave spaces unless the question is valid. Also, tell the truth on your resume and application. If you take a lie-based job, you may be punished severely once your boss learns, including termination.
